

other hood finds its way back on... it looks like a little piece of California!

Cliff has however had a go at fitting the fibreglass roof, but on the basis of one attempt at a quick change from soft to hard-top he reckons it'll be a while before he drags it out of the garage again.

One thing that's clear from spending time with Cliff, is in spite of owning one of the most desirable Defenders in the country/world, I'm glad to say he isn't in it for the money. Heaven only knows what a dealer's asking price would be, especially given the pile of extras, the low mileage and the car's history, but for the moment it's obvious that Cliff is happy being 'tickled pink that I've got this thing'.

Enquiring whether he would sell it, Cliff is man enough to admit: 'I guess everything has its price, but I couldn't just sell it to anyone'. Even if you did fancy making a bid, something tells me you might find yourself having to wait until long after summer has subsided before you get any kind of answer ■
